

Notes from an interview with Dr. and Mrs. Littlefield on November 2, 1984

We did not have the tape machine because I forgot to bring the conversion plug, as a consequence Mrs. Littlefield read her notes. At the end of the reading I asked several questions: 1) Where are the records of the Women's Club? - Try Lib Kern or Virginia Reed. 2) Did Mrs. Littlefield receive any recompense as the President's wife? No, and not many thank you's either.

Upon entertaining Amy Vanderbilt she put on her make-up at the table and publicly noted, and asked Henry to feel, the roll of fat around her middle.

Both Littlefields were tremendously upset by the Bridgeport Post story in December of 1970 on the saga of Halsey and Littlefield. They were very hurt and upset over the article which was written by an outsider. There was a very sympathetic letter which they showed me written by John Cox to help assuage the hurt.

Dr. Littlefield noted that Jeanie had not emphasized what was originally the Faculty Women's Club, but became a university wide women's club, including the staff and faculty wives. This was a part of the effort to develop a friendly institution.

In the early days and shortly after the war, Jeanie did all of the work for the dinners and charged only for the food - no caterers were used. She did have some help for serving, including Mrs. Littlefield's maid, who was paid for by the Littlefields, and everything was prepared by Jeanie Littlefield.

There was no university maintenance for the property of the grounds, excepting for setups and cleanups when the lawn parties were held at their home.

The comment was made that presidential wives should remember that if stipends are given, it involves certain responsibilities.

Dr. Littlefield mentioned at least the university can provide expenses for the wife when the husband has to travel. This is minor, but important because the wife can help to bring back ideas.

There was emphasis again on the unique relationship of Jim Halsey and Henry Littlefield and the wives had a smooth and easy relationship, although at the end, Julia and Jim became very conscious of their role as Chancellor and Chancellor's wife. This was noted particularly at the first tea after Henry became CEO and Julia would not get in line appropriately.

However, much should be made of the contribution of the women at UB with the wives of the deans and faculty wives doing much over the years.

Dr. Roucek had been buried the day before and I asked Henry how he was removed. Henry was somewhat hazy, he did note that Roucek was reacting unnaturally to many of the young females in his classes and the question came up on how to break his tenure. Generally speaking, he told Roucek that he had no future at the institution and he got the message. (This is something that I have to check out further with Dr. Miles)

However, some emphasis should be placed upon Roucek's development of the sociology's colloquium often held at different churches. It should be noted also that when they went to various ethnic groupings, the students from that area were less likely to go - it being their own ethnic group, however, they would go to others. The sociology colloquium was an effort to involve the community and to emphasize that all learning did not occur in the classroom.

Littlefield did agree that Roucek was a prolific writer, but often of a cut and paste school.

In regards to other fabulous fakes, he had always been suspicious of Dr. Dolan - he would never get involved in any federal grant and only taught in basic courses.

Littlefield mentioned that I should meet with and talk with Bill Nowlan.

In reference to MacJannet, Littlefield noted he turned over some of his facilities to Tufts for an alumni college and gave me a clipping from the Tufts' alumni bulletin.

Both Littlefields agreed that they would develop folders which will eventually come to the University archives.

The story of the Bert Tobin scholarship was told based upon a coin collection which Mr. Tobin^{had} appraised for $10, - $11,000 and gave to the university with the injunction that it could not be sold. Three years later he added to the collection and said the collection may be sold and it was done with the proceeds going for the Tobin scholarship. Tobin was President of Ttilo. .

Additionally, the board approved the approach to Henry DuPont to come on to the Board of Trustees. Henry noted that DuPont collected old coins- but only silver, not gold. The coin collection was now up to $18,000 - $19,000 and Henry DuPont bought those with Henry Littlefield buying the gold coins which he still has.

Littlefield gave me also a copy of another speech on financial development and indicated that he had more requests for a copy of this speech than any other - and noted that it was as true today as it was then.

Dr. Littlefield continued to emphasize that he feels one of his main contributions was that of the financial structure of the university.

In reference to this, Vice President Diem was talked about. Diem was brought in as an assistant to the President, not as a Vice President, which he looked upon as a demotion having been Vice President at Penn State. Diem was elevated to Vice President at the time Henry became CEO - and to this Halsey agreed. However, on second thought, Halsey didn't like the idea of Chancellorship because this was seen by him as being on the way out. But at the same time he did work to get Diem as Vice President - when finally the trustees made the decision.

Diem had a lot of experience at Dictaphone and Penn State. Adelaide, Diem's wife, hated Pennsylvania and they had kept their house here.

Diem basically did a good job. However, at the time of the commitment of the Board to build a library, Diem went over his head to the trustees, saying that we couldn't afford the $4,000,000 to build the library (it finally cost _____). In the meantime, Littlefield had stated in the Scribe that there was a vote of the board to go ahead for our library and that we would have to go ahead - so there was a considerable amount of antagonism - Littlefield said he was "burned" with Diem - so everything was delayed. Henry almost resigned at this point and he told Newman Marsillius "How can I go to the students when there is no money for the library and yet we are building the Arts and Humanities bldg?" He noted also that we had been criticized in our last evaluation for having an inadequate library. Newman pleaded with Henry to stay and he did. Henry looks upon this as the start of the getting the university into trouble financially. From Henry's point of view, we got the necessary financial information from Diem. The auditors were always questioned and they were satisfied, but in auditing, much is often judgement - and judgement is involved. Certainly all of the reactions were good and the trustees went over the reports with an eagle eye.

Henry also said that he had very good relationships with Diem, but maybe he was oblivious to how the Vice President and deans related to their support in it. For example, Dr. Miles was not following policy approved by the deans in his own college which was why Dr. Miles was not accepted as an academic Vice President when Christie was brought in.

Of course, Diem had to go a step farther with the numbers and there was the three year period under Manning. But when Henry left in January of 1970, the 1970-71 budget was in tune so the financial trouble came later.

I should also talk to Bigsbee on the question of finances. Additionally, and subsequently, Diem nominated Henry and read the citation for his becoming a Senior Builder of Bridgeport. Henry also said that there was also a poor arrangement when the board allowed Manning to stay on the job for the year afterwards, and then publicly state that the university was being run by a troika. This caused the institution to drift. The Board should have named one of those troika as the acting president and probably Carrier who was the academic vice president.

I should speak also to Joe Clancey about Magnus Wahlstrom. Henry also noted that Bannow was the outside and the idea man - where Magnus was the engineer. The same thing was true with the Carlson's where Bill was the outside man and Phil was the engineer - an inside man.

I should also speak to Lou Corbit. He has a friend who is the father of Milton Cohen (?) Ike Cohen who sat in with Cortright in the early days in the starting of the Junior College.

Page 5/11-2-84 Interview with Littlefields

I should also talk with Alan Lewis on the period of the Shakespeare institute.

Notes from an interview with Dr. and Mrs. Littlefield on November 2, 1984

We did not have the tape machine because I forgot to bring the conversion plug, as a consequence Mrs. Littlefield read her notes. At the end of the reading I asked several questions: 1) Where are the records of the Women's Club? - Try Lib Kern or Virginia Reed. 2) Did Mrs. Littlefield receive any recompense as the President's wife? No, and not many thank you's either.

Upon entertaining Amy Vanderbilt she put on her make-up at the table and publicly noted, and asked Henry to feel, the roll of fat around her middle.

Both Littlefields were tremendously upset by the Bridgeport Post story in December of 1970 on the saga of Halsey and Littlefield. They were very hurt and upset over the article which was written by an outsider. There was a very sympathetic letter which they showed me written by John Cox to help assuage the hurt.

Dr. Littlefield noted that Jeanie had not emphasized what was originally the Faculty Women's Club, but became a university wide women's club, including the staff and faculty wives. This was a part of the effort to develop a friendly institution.

In the early days and shortly after the war, Jeanie did all of the work for the dinners and charged only for the food - no caterers were used. She did have some help for serving, including Mrs. Littlefield's maid, who was paid for by the Littlefields, and everything was prepared by Jeanie Littlefield.

There was no university maintenance for the property of the grounds, excepting for setups and cleanups when the lawn parties were held at their home.

The comment was made that presidential wives should remember that if stipends are given, it involves certain responsibilities.

Dr. Littlefield mentioned at least the university can provide expenses for the wife when the husband has to travel. This is minor, but important because the wife can help to bring back ideas.

There was emphasis again on the unique relationship of Jim Halsey and Henry Littlefield and the wives had a smooth and easy relationship, although at the end, Julia and Jim became very conscious of their role as Chancellor and Chancellor's wife. This was noted particularly at the first tea after Henry became CEO and Julia would not get in line appropriately.

However, much should be made of the contribution of the women at UB with the wives of the deans and faculty wives doing much over the years.

Dr. Roucek had been buried the day before and I asked Henry how he was removed. Henry was somewhat hazy, he did note that Roucek was reacting unnaturally to many of the young females in his classes and the question came up on how to break his tenure. Generally speaking, he told Roucek that he had no future at the institution and he got the message. (This is something that I have to check out further with Dr. Miles)

However, some emphasis should be placed upon Roucek's development of the sociology's colloquium often held at different churches. It should be noted also that when they went to various ethnic groupings, the students from that area were less likely to go - it being their own ethnic group, however, they would go to others. The sociology colloquium was an effort to involve the community and to emphasize that all learning did not occur in the classroom.

Littlefield did agree that Roucek was a prolific writer, but often of a cut and paste school.

In regards to other fabulous fakes, he had always been suspicious of Dr. Dolan - he would never get involved in any federal grant and only taught in basic courses.

Littlefield mentioned that I should meet with and talk with Bill Nowlan.

In reference to MacJannet, Littlefield noted he turned over some of his facilities to Tufts for an alumni college and gave me a clipping from the Tufts' alumni bulletin.

Both Littlefields agreed that they would develop folders which will eventually come to the University archives.

The story of the Bert Tobin scholarship was told based upon a coin collection which Mr. Tobin^{had} appraised for $10, - $11,000 and gave to the university with the injunction that it could not be sold. Three years later he added to the collection and said the collection may be sold and it was done with the proceeds going for the Tobin scholarship. Tobin was President of Ttilo. .

Additionally, the board approved the approach to Henry DuPont to come on to the Board of Trustees. Henry noted that DuPont collected old coins- but only silver, not gold. The coin collection was now up to $18,000 - $19,000 and Henry DuPont bought those with Henry Littlefield buying the gold coins which he still has.

Littlefield gave me also a copy of another speech on financial development and indicated that he had more requests for a copy of this speech than any other - and noted that it was as true today as it was then.

Dr. Littlefield continued to emphasize that he feels one of his main contributions was that of the financial structure of the university.

In reference to this, Vice President Diem was talked about. Diem was brought in as an assistant to the President, not as a Vice President, which he looked upon as a demotion having been Vice President at Penn State. Diem was elevated to Vice President at the time Henry became CEO - and to this Halsey agreed. However, on second thought, Halsey didn't like the idea of Chancellorship because this was seen by him as being on the way out. But at the same time he did work to get Diem as Vice President - when finally the trustees made the decision.

Diem had a lot of experience at Dictaphone and Penn State. Adelaide, Diem's wife, hated Pennsylvania and they had kept their house here.

Diem basically did a good job. However, at the time of the commitment of the Board to build a library, Diem went over his head to the trustees, saying that we couldn't afford the $4,000,000 to build the library (it finally cost _____). In the meantime, Littlefield had stated in the Scribe that there was a vote of the board to go ahead for our library and that we would have to go ahead - so there was a considerable amount of antagonism - Littlefield said he was "burned" with Diem - so everything was delayed. Henry almost resigned at this point and he told Newman Marsillius "How can I go to the students when there is no money for the library and yet we are building the Arts and Humanities bldg?" He noted also that we had been criticized in our last evaluation for having an inadequate library. Newman pleaded with Henry to stay and he did. Henry looks upon this as the start of the getting the university into trouble financially. From Henry's point of view, we got the necessary financial information from Diem. The auditors were always questioned and they were satisfied, but in auditing, much is often judgement - and judgement is involved. Certainly all of the reactions were good and the trustees went over the reports with an eagle eye.

Henry also said that he had very good relationships with Diem, but maybe he was oblivious to how the Vice President and deans related to their support in it. For example, Dr. Miles was not following policy approved by the deans in his own college which was why Dr. Miles was not accepted as an academic Vice President when Christie was brought in.

Of course, Diem had to go a step farther with the numbers and there was the three year period under Manning. But when Henry left in January of 1970, the 1970-71 budget was in tune so the financial trouble came later.

I should also talk to Bigsbee on the question of finances. Additionally, and subsequently, Diem nominated Henry and read the citation for his becoming a Senior Builder of Bridgeport. Henry also said that there was also a poor arrangement when the board allowed Manning to stay on the job for the year afterwards, and then publicly state that the university was being run by a troika. This caused the institution to drift. The Board should have named one of those troika as the acting president and probably Carrier who was the academic vice president.

I should speak also to Joe Clancey about Magnus Wahlstrom. Henry also noted that Bannow was the outside and the idea man - where Magnus was the engineer. The same thing was true with the Carlson's where Bill was the outside man and Phil was the engineer - an inside man.

I should also speak to Lou Corbit. He has a friend who is the father of Milton Cohen (? Ike Cohen who sat in with Cortright in the early days in the starting of the Junior College.

Page 5/11-2-84 Interview with Littlefields

I should also talk with Alan Lewis on the period of the Shakespeare institute.

Notes from an interview with Dr. and Mrs. Littlefield on November 2, 1984

We did not have the tape machine because I forgot to bring the conversion plug, as a consequence Mrs. Littlefield read her notes. At the end of the reading I asked several questions: 1) Where are the records of the Women's Club? - Try Lib Kern or Virginia Reed. 2) Did Mrs. Littlefield receive any recompense as the President's wife? No, and not many thank you's either.

Upon entertaining Amy Vanderbilt she put on her make-up at the table and publicly noted, and asked Henry to feel, the roll of fat around her middle.

Both Littlefields were tremendously upset by the Bridgeport Post story in December of 1970 on the saga of Halsey and Littlefield. They were very hurt and upset over the article which was written by an outsider. There was a very sympathetic letter which they showed me written by John Cox to help assuage the hurt.

Dr. Littlefield noted that Jeanie had not emphasized what was originally the Faculty Women's Club, but became a university wide women's club, including the staff and faculty wives. This was a part of the effort to develop a friendly institution.

In the early days and shortly after the war, Jeanie did all of the work for the dinners and charged only for the food - no caterers were used. She did have some help for serving, including Mrs. Littlefield's maid, who was paid for by the Littlefields, and everything was prepared by Jeanie Littlefield.

There was no university maintenance for the property of the grounds, excepting for setups and cleanups when the lawn parties were held at their home.

The comment was made that presidential wives should remember that if stipends are given, it involves certain responsibilities.

Dr. Littlefield mentioned at least the university can provide expenses for the wife when the husband has to travel. This is minor, but important because the wife can help to bring back ideas.

There was emphasis again on the unique relationship of Jim Halsey and Henry Littlefield and the wives had a smooth and easy relationship, although at the end, Julia and Jim became very conscious of their role as Chancellor and Chancellor's wife. This was noted particularly at the first tea after Henry became CEO and Julia would not get in line appropriately.

However, much should be made of the contribution of the women at UB with the wives of the deans and faculty wives doing much over the years.

Dr. Roucek had been buried the day before and I asked Henry how he was removed. Henry was somewhat hazy, he did note that Roucek was reacting unnaturally to many of the young females in his classes and the question came up on how to break his tenure. Generally speaking, he told Roucek that he had no future at the institution and he got the message. (This is something that I have to check out further with Dr. Miles)

However, some emphasis should be placed upon Roucek's development of the sociology's colloquium often held at different churches. It should be noted also that when they went to various ethnic groupings, the students from that area were less likely to go - it being their own ethnic group, however, they would go to others. The sociology colloquium was an effort to involve the community and to emphasize that all learning did not occur in the classroom.

Littlefield did agree that Roucek was a prolific writer, but often of a cut and paste school.

In regards to other fabulous fakes, he had always been suspicious of Dr. Dolan - he would never get involved in any federal grant and only taught in basic courses.

Littlefield mentioned that I should meet with and talk with Bill Nowlan.

In reference to MacJanet, Littlefield noted he turned over some of his facilities to Tufts for an alumni college and gave me a clipping from the Tufts' alumni bulletin.

Both Littlefields agreed that they would develop folders which will eventually come to the University archives.

The story of the Bert Tobin scholarship was told based upon a coin collection which Mr. Tobin^{had} appraised for $10, - $11,000 and gave to the university with the injunction that it could not be sold. Three years later he added to the collection and said the collection may be sold and it was done with the proceeds going for the Tobin scholarship. Tobin was President of Ttilo.

Additionally, the board approved the approach to Henry DuPont to come on to the Board of Trustees. Henry noted that DuPont collected old coins- but only silver, not gold. The coin collection was now up to $18,000 - $19,000 and Henry DuPont bought those with Henry Littlefield buying the gold coins which he still has.

Littlefield gave me also a copy of another speech on financial development and indicated that he had more requests for a copy of this speech than any other - and noted that it was as true today as it was then.

Dr. Littlefield continued to emphasize that he feels one of his main contributions was that of the financial structure of the university.

In reference to this, Vice President Diem was talked about. Diem was brought in as an assistant to the President, not as a Vice President, which he looked upon as a demotion having been Vice President at Penn State. Diem was elevated to Vice President at the time Henry became CEO - and to this Halsey agreed. However, on second thought, Halsey didn't like the idea of Chancellorship because this was seen by him as being on the way out. But at the same time he did work to get Diem as Vice President - when finally the trustees made the decision.

Diem had a lot of experience at Dictaphone and Penn State. Adelaide, Diem's wife, hated Pennsylvania and they had kept their house here.

Diem basically did a good job. However, at the time of the commitment of the Board to build a library, Diem went over his head to the trustees, saying that we couldn't afford the $4,000,000 to build the library (it finally cost _____). In the meantime, Littlefield had stated in the Scribe that there was a vote of the board to go ahead for our library and that we would have to go ahead - so there was a considerable amount of antagonism - Littlefield said he was "burned" with Diem - so everything was delayed. Henry almost resigned at this point and he told Newman Marsillius "How can I go to the students when there is no money for the library and yet we are building the Arts and Humanities bldg?" He noted also that we had been criticized in our last evaluation for having an inadequate library. Newman pleaded with Henry to stay and he did. Henry looks upon this as the start of the getting the university into trouble financially. From Henry's point of view, we got the necessary financial information from Diem. The auditors were always questioned and they were satisfied, but in auditing, much is often judgement - and judgement is involved. Certainly all of the reactions were good and the trustees went over the reports with an eagle eye.

Henry also said that he had very good relationships with Diem, but maybe he was oblivious to how the Vice President and deans related to their support in it. For example, Dr. Miles was not following policy approved by the deans in his own college which was why Dr. Miles was not accepted as an academic Vice President when Christie was brought in.

Of course, Diem had to go a step farther with the numbers and there was the three year period under Manning. But when Henry left in January of 1970, the 1970-71 budget was in tune so the financial trouble came later.

I should also talk to Bigsbee on the question of finances. Additionally, and subsequently, Diem nominated Henry and read the citation for his becoming a Senior Builder of Bridgeport. Henry also said that there was also a poor arrangement when the board allowed Manning to stay on the job for the year afterwards, and then publicly state that the university was being run by a troika. This caused the institution to drift. The Board should have named one of those troika as the acting president and probably Carrier who was the academic vice president.

I should speak also to Joe Clancey about Magnus Wahlstrom. Henry also noted that Bannow was the outside and the idea man - where Magnus was the engineer. The same thing was true with the Carlson's where Bill was the outside man and Phil was the engineer - an inside man.

I should also speak to Lou Corbit. He has a friend who is the father of Milton Cohen (?). Ike Cohen who sat in with Cortright in the early days in the starting of the Junior College.

Page 5/11-2-84 Interview with Littlefields

I should also talk with Alan Lewis on the period of the Shakespeare institute.